I bought two of the small tables. They are perfect for my intended use. I can put my two burner camp stove on top and do my canning. Great deal and easy to assemble! Arrive with some scratches to the surface and one corner of the back splash was bent. However, it's nice and solid and fine for my needs. If you want cheap and functional this is fine. If you want it to look nice, buy something else. We received two Gridman Steel Commercial islands...it was 25 below zero past two weeks so I could not open the packages in the garage till today...On one of the tables, 1 of the bolts that holds the runner support under the table top was snapped off and lying in the bottom of box...since all the rest are there, I'm hoping it will still be fine without that one, as you cannot get the remaining screw out that is snapped off as it is flush with the hole and nothing to grab ahold of to replace it with another. On both tables the top backsplashes are a bit bent in on the edges, as with also one of the bottom shelves on one edge. After checking this out, I am thinking my husband will be able to put a protective towel or something over the area, and bend them back into place with a vice grip or pliers. There are a few scrapes and scratches in the surfaces, but I already have a similar table in my kitchen and know that stainless has a tendency for this. We bought them for use as counters in our bunkhouse we use at our campground, and although they will have those imperfections, they are very sturdy and will be easy to clean and serve the purpose we got them for.
